

Language Education Policy for New Arrival

Prof. Jeff MacSwan (University of Maryland)

Germany has become a home for increasingly many new arrivals, especially in North Rhine-Westphalia, where about half speak German as a second language and another language at home. This talk explores historical, theoretical, and empirical aspects of language education policy in the US, and asks whether solutions developed in the US context might be suitable to the German context as well.